

Is Wilting of the Foliage a Good Indicator of Water Needs of Plants?

YES! As soil moisture levels decline, plants may wilt briefly during the hottest part of the day but recover quickly as temperatures fall at night. The more severe the drought conditions, the more severe the wilting becomes.

If the water needs of the plant are not met, the plant will eventually reach a point that damage will occur to the plant.