

Prevent Winter Damage to Evergreens

Desiccation injury which occurs commonly to evergreen plants during the winter can be prevented. This type of damage is often referred to as winter dying, winter burn or winter injury. The damage is caused by the evergreen needles losing more moisture than the plant can supply through the root system.

This type of damage can be prevented by watering evergreen plants in the landscape in the late fall.